

Please cite as: EUAA, '3.8. Education' in COI Report - Syria: Country Focus, July 2025.

3.8. Education

As of 15 December 2024, schools in Syria, including in Damascus, officially reopened.676 A rapid need assessment conducted by UNOCHA indicated that among the main reasons of children being out of school in Damascus is work, psychological distress and lack of adequate materials and sanitation.677 For detailed information on access to education see the sub-section 2.7\(c\).

In the capital, 5% of key respondents reported no access to primary education and 10% reported no access to secondary education, according to an IOM assessment conducted between March and April 2025.678 While a higher number of universities was functioning in cities such as Damascus, Aleppo and Latakia, these institutions were reported to rely on outdated curricula.679

- 676

Al Jazeera, Syria's schools reopen a week after al-Assad's overthrow, 15 December 2024, url; Modern Diplomacy, Restoring Classrooms, Inspiring Futures in Syria, 20 February 2025, url

- 677

UNOCHA, Syrian Arab Republic, rapid need assessment, Education, 25 January 2025, url

- 678

IOM, Syrian Arab Republic — Communities of Return Index — Round 1 (15 March - 05 April 2025), url, p. 9

- 679

WENR, Rebuilding Syria's Education System: Navigating Challenges and Embracing Opportunities, 14 March 2025, url