2.1. Composition and mandate

The interim government is led by Nobel Peace Prize laureate Muhammad Yunus, who was installed as Chief Adviser of Bangladesh (head of the interim government⁶⁶) on 8 August 2024.⁶⁷ Yunus was the choice of the student protest movement⁶⁸ and was appointed by the President of Bangladesh, following a meeting with key coordinators of the student protest movement, senior military leaders, civil society members, and some business leaders.⁶⁹ Moreover, 22 individuals were appointed as advisers to the interim government, comprised of 18 men and 4 women,⁷⁰ with the responsibility to supervise allocated ministries.⁷¹ The appointed advisers include civil society representatives, environmentalists, former senior bureaucrats, academics, as well as two key coordinators of the student movement.⁷² Political parties, however, have no representation in the interim government.⁷³ Although the army is described as a 'pillar of power' in the government,⁷⁴ it has promised to support Yunus,⁷⁵ and army chief General Waker-Uz-Zaman has pledged not to interfere with politics.⁷⁶

Bangladesh used to have a system with an independent caretaker government leading the country during election periods. However, the former government abolished this system in 2011.⁷⁷ In August 2024, there were therefore no constitutional provisions that allowed the formation of an interim government⁷⁸ nor any provisions that outlined its mandate and authority,⁷⁹ and as a result the interim government lacks constitutional basis.⁸⁰ The President sought an advisory opinion on the matter from the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, under article 106 of the Constitution.⁸¹ The Court held a virtual court hearing on 8 August 2024⁸² during which it ruled that forming an interim government was legal due to the 'urgent need to run state affairs' and to 'fill the constitutional vacuum'.⁸³ The interim government and Yunus enjoy strong public support.⁸⁴ There is, however, a reported uncertainty as regards the authority of the interim government to enact, amend or repeal laws, and the risk of future governments to declare its actions as invalid given its lack of constitutional basis.⁸⁵ Legislative changes have been adopted by Presidential ordinances, that are equivalent to laws, which will be retroactively placed in Parliament to be ratified.⁸⁶ As described by International Crisis Group, the interim government has been able to rely on this method by 'banking on a combination of a pliant Supreme Court, political consensus, military backing and popular legitimacy'.⁸⁷

The interim government's primary task is to organise new elections.⁸⁸ According to the Constitution, elections should be held within 90 days following the dissolution of Parliament.⁸⁹ The interim government, however, formed several reform commissions following its installation,⁹⁰ and Yunus has stressed the need to await necessary reform work before the next election.⁹¹ The next parliamentary election is envisaged to take place sometime between December 2025 and June 2026,⁹² depending on the reform work.⁹³ The Election Commission is reportedly planning to announce an action plan for the coming election in July 2025.⁹⁴ Meanwhile, the political party BNP has been putting pressure on the interim government to hold elections as soon as possible,95 while discussions with political parties on what reforms to implement before the election have been ongoing.96
