2.4.2 Journalists and media workers

The Iraqi Constitution guarantees freedom of expression<sup>621</sup> in a manner that does not violate public order and morality.<sup>622</sup> Iraq's Penal Code contains several vaguely worded provisions that restrict freedom of expression and peaceful assembly, allowing authorities to prosecute<sup>623</sup> and arrest individuals for expressing their views.<sup>624</sup> For example, Article 403 penalises material that 'violates public integrity or decency' without defining these terms,<sup>625</sup> while Article 434 criminalises defamation and insult.<sup>626</sup> These provisions are frequently used to deter criticism of powerful political and religious figures,<sup>627</sup> particularly targeting independent journalists.<sup>628</sup> Therefore, authorities continued to suppress freedom of expression during the reporting period, often under the pretext of maintaining stability or public morality.<sup>629</sup> As such, according to Reporters Without Borders, Iraq ranked 155th out of 180 countries in the World Press Freedom Index for 2025.<sup>630</sup> Civil society organisations, human rights defenders and journalists faced prosecution, intimidation, and harassment for criticising public officials,<sup>631</sup> including by targeting their social media accounts.<sup>632</sup> Between May 2024 and May 2025, UNAMI documented 26 cases in which activists and journalists were charged with defamation for criticising government officials or policies.<sup>633</sup> Security forces, both in federal Iraq and in the KRI, used violence against journalists for covering protests.<sup>634</sup>

The Media and Communications Commission suspended political talk shows,<sup>635</sup> restricted broadcasting of certain programmes and banned specific media commentators following objections from the Coordination Framework and Shia clerics.<sup>636</sup> Several television channels reportedly received threats from armed groups.<sup>637</sup> The potential banning of TikTok resurfaced following remarks by the Minister of Communication, Hiyam Al-Yasiri, who claimed the app 'undermines Iraq's social fabric'.<sup>638</sup>

In the KRI, security forces and individuals affiliated with powerful political parties continued to intimidate, harass and threaten journalists and activists. Security forces arrested or summoned several journalists<sup>639</sup> for covering protests or conducting investigative reporting.<sup>640</sup>

The Committee to Protect Journalists (CPJ) documented the killing of two journalists in Iraq.<sup>641</sup> In August 2024, Asayish forces attacked a journalist and a cameraman, while the latter were covering protests, for refusing to hand over the camera and microphone. In the same month, security forces attacked a journalist in Baghdad for covering a protest by medical school graduates demanding jobs.<sup>642</sup> In October 2024, a female social media activist died, under unclear circumstances, in a Baghdad prison after receiving a two-year sentence from a Kirkuk court.<sup>643</sup> The Ministry of Justice refused to disclose the death report, and some perceived the case as 'suspicious'.644 On 23 August 2024, a Turkish drone strike killed two female journalists near Sulaymaniyah;645 unknown perpetrators attacked their memorial on 11 February 2025.646 In November 2024, a journalist survived in an attack in which he was stabbed 21 times in Sulaymaniyah after the latter alleged that a Peshmerga Affairs Ministry official obstructed a local electricity project.647 In June 2025, PMF forces arrested a Kurdish journalist in Baghdad while he covered a protest.648

Following the outbreak of the Iran-Israel conflict in June 2025, Iraq's National Security Service (NSS) announced it is actively monitoring social media and will pursue legal action against users posting content deemed to incite sectarian or political tensions.649

In February 2025, Iraq's parliament held a first reading of a draft Right to Information Law which, if passed, would further restricts access to information.650 The draft bill sparked concerns among civil society organisations, journalists, and experts as several provisions would reportedly impose restrictions on access to information in key areas of government activities.651
