

3.2.13. Balochistan nationalist groups

According to Balochistan's Chief Minister Sarfraz Bugti, an estimated 4 000 to 5 000 Baloch separatists were active across the Balochistan province.<sup>453</sup> These movements were fuelled by repressive state conduct and local perceptions of the continued marginalisation of the population and economic exploitation of the province's resources by the government<sup>454</sup> and through projects launched as part of the China-Pakistan Economic Corridor (CPEC) initiative.<sup>455</sup> As of April 2025, the Baloch insurgency encompassed around 10 militant factions, with the Balochistan Liberation Army Jeeyand faction (BLA-J), the BLA Azad faction (BLA-A) and the Balochistan Liberation Front (BLF) regularly claiming responsibility for attacks. The Baloch Raji Aajoi Sangar (BRAS) organisation, formed in 2018,<sup>456</sup> continued to act as a platform for Baloch and Sindhi militant groups to coordinate attacks in Balochistan and Sindh. It currently comprises the BLA-J, the BLF, the Baloch Republican Guard (BRG), and the Sindhudesh Revolutionary Army (SRA).<sup>457</sup>

Baloch nationalist groups have targeted security forces, infrastructure, and foreign investments,<sup>459</sup> as well as non-Baloch workers and settlers, especially ethnic Punjabis.<sup>460</sup> Sources referred to the BLA-J faction as the most active<sup>461</sup> and lethal insurgent group in Balochistan in 2025. It seeks Baloch independence through armed struggle and operates as a decentralised network with cells spread across Balochistan.<sup>462</sup> The group runs four special forces units,<sup>463</sup> including the suicide unit Majeed Brigade and the Fatah Squad, as well as media and intelligence cells.<sup>464</sup> Its operational focus lies on mobile and hit-and-run tactics, including suicide car bombings, IED attacks, ambushes, and blockades.<sup>465</sup> Its targets include security forces,<sup>466</sup> infrastructure, Chinese investments,<sup>467</sup> and civilians in Balochistan, including off-duty security personnel<sup>468</sup> and individuals travelling to Punjab.<sup>469</sup> The Majeed Brigade has expanded its ranks to include female fighters.<sup>470</sup> Amongst others, the deadly hijacking of the Jaffar Express train by BLA-J in March 2025<sup>471</sup> indicated an increase in the group's operational capabilities.<sup>472</sup>

The BLA-A faction, traditionally weaker than BLA-J and BLF,473 operates a loose network of Baloch fighters under its exiled leader Hyrbyair Marri. During the reference period, it showed signs of a resurgence after having been relatively dormant since 2016, conducting its first suicide bombing, as well as low-profile bombings and ambushes. It also executed alleged state collaborators and security force members.474

The BLF concentrated on guerilla warfare, operating cells in central and southern Balochistan. In a new tactical development, its leader Allah Nazar Baloch allowed suicide attacks and included women fighters. A first suicide attack by the group, carried out by a woman, targeted a Frontier Corps (FC) headquarters.475 For further information on Balochi nationalist groups, including background information, see section 3.1.6.
